

“IS THERE HOPE? THE FASCINATION OF THE DISCOVERY”

21. A breath of wind that carries a difference

“In order to challenge the common mentality, the ‘fact’ need not be anything clamorous. The power of the fact, of that particular detail, does not depend on its clamorous nature. It can be a mere breath of wind, but one that carries a difference that magnetizes you.”

(J. Carrón, Is There Hope? The Fascination of the Discovery, HAB, Tampa & Denver 2021, pp. 75–76).

We are proposing two documentations of this:

2. “Tonight, after a while, I attended the School of Community meeting online because I felt the need to. This afternoon, while I was studying and talking to my mother about how tough this last period is between oral and written tests, as the quarter comes to an end, my mommy—who does not attend the Movement—said to me at some point, ‘Go to the GS meeting tonight and ask them how they are coping with this period!’ and so I did. I was left speechless by my mommy telling me to talk about this with the GS people because every time I came home from the meetings, she could tell from the look in my eyes how happy I am to have this experience; and if she has noticed this from the outside it really means that doing School of Community has helped me and is helping me and changing me a lot over this period of time. The others can see that by coming to the meetings I have changed my gaze, and now mine is a more lively gaze. I then asked my friends how they were coping with this period—which is so tough for me, feeling more and more alone, more and more stressed and anxious—and I realized that I wasn’t alone at all and I understood that everyone struggles, but they try to give a meaning to the effort they make, everyone looks for something beautiful in what they study and in the effort involved in studying, but also in their daily after school activity.”

What facts (what “breaths of wind”) have you been hit or grasped by this week?
